

423

The death of Honorius in 423 had been followed by a disputed succession.

Theodosius I toyed with the idea of governing the west himself, but was eventually persuaded to support the claim of VALENTINIAN III, nephew of HONORIUS, and VALENTINIAN's redoubtable mother GALLA PLACIDIA.

the disorder after the death of emperor Honorius in 423 supposedly shifted the balance of power of the Goths, and for the first time in Roman history, barbarian co-owners proceeded to actually divide the land. the Goths were said to have received $\frac{2}{3}$ of the cultivated land.

Galla Placidia quarreled with her brother emperor HONORIUS and fled to court of Theodosius II.
After death of Honorius, she became regent for her son VALENTINIAN III whom Theodosius placed on the throne after overthrowing
the usurper John (425).
She had great influence over

you can but also use funds
to leave the government largely in the hands of AETIUS

Emperor Honorius died and the question of succession was problematic.

423 AD

Honorius moved the capital to Ravenna where he was when Visigoths sacked Rome 410 AD.
Honorius died 423. The reins of government were taken over by his half-sister, Galla PLACIDIA, whose biography reads like an outrageously
exaggerated adventure story.

423 AD

VALENTINIANUS III (West) &
THEODOSIUS II (East)